Vallejo not only does not wear out but grows more relevant as we move forward from his death. His poetry is filled with sense switching and fantastic metaphors that serve to unhinge your thought process from linear, logical, to a mystic, hallucinatory world where The Book of Revelations seems to be rewritten in your presence.

The Complete Poetry of César Vallejo, a Peruvian poet from the early 20th century, was the last thing I would have expected, for I was not only woefully ignorant of him, but could not recall having ever heard of him before. Being no expert in poetry, and in fact, being in the case of poetry quite a light reader, I would in most c

To love Vallejo's poetry is to love humanity, to embrace humanity with its wars, its hate and its a fuck up future. To read Vallejo's poetry is to become human again, to understand the pain of others as our pain, to hate ourselves and to despise what we have become. In the meantime only poetry can heal and remind us of our futile existence.

Vallejo's poetry takes the Spanish language to an unprecedented level of emotional rawness and stretches its grammatical possibilities. Striking against theology with the very rhetoric of the Christian faith, Vallejo's is a tragic vision--perhaps the only one in the canon of Spanish-language literature--in which salvation and sin are one and the same.
